How We Work and Learn

How students join, study, get support and use the academy.

Effective 30 September 2026

1. Our teaching approach

We help students build mathematical understanding through clear explanations, worked examples and deliberate practice. Our website offers pathways for CAPS, IEB, TVET and university mathematics. Each course page identifies its level, focus and learning offer so you can choose the right course. We do not promise a particular mark or qualification: your progress depends in part on completing the lessons and practising the work.

2. Joining and studying

Register with accurate information, use your own student account and verify your email address. Choose a course after reviewing its outcomes, structure, price and any stated access period. Once payment is verified, the purchased course appears in your private dashboard. You can work through the available videos, notes, examples and activities, and use the dashboard to continue learning and track completed work.

Course learning is designed for independent online study. A listed number of lessons or guided hours describes the course content; it is not a promise of one-to-one teaching time. Any live lesson, individual tutoring or other additional service must be expressly offered and arranged separately.

Students need a suitable device and internet connection to use online lessons. Tell us if a lesson, activity or paid course does not load as expected. We will investigate an access problem and provide an appropriate remedy if a service we promised cannot be supplied.

3. Support and communication

We handle course guidance, registration, payment, account and technical enquiries through the Contact page. The current phone number, email address and support hours are listed there. Support hours describe when the team is available; the self-paced course dashboard may be used outside those hours when the service is available.

To help us respond, include your curriculum and level for course guidance; an order reference for payment enquiries; or your device and a description of the issue for technical help. Never send a password, one-time PIN or full card details. We will use enquiry details to respond and handle the matter in line with our privacy information. We have not promised an exact response time; urgent access problems should be described clearly in the enquiry.

4. Respectful learning and account use

Treat students and staff respectfully in all academy communications and activities. Submit your own work where an activity asks for an individual response. Do not share an account or paid materials, copy or redistribute videos and notes, enter another student's account, bypass access controls or interfere with the learning service. Course materials belong to the academy or its licensors.

We may investigate misuse and take proportionate steps to protect students and the service, including restricting an affected account where necessary. We will give the account holder a reasonable opportunity to raise an error or concern, except where immediate action is needed to protect the service or others. Payment and refund questions remain governed by our Payment Policy and applicable law.

5. Course and service changes

We may correct errors, improve examples and update lessons as curricula and teaching needs change. If a material part of a paid course becomes unavailable or materially different from what was offered at purchase, contact us. We will explain the change and seek an appropriate remedy, including restored access, a suitable alternative you accept or a refund where applicable.

If a separately arranged live session is offered, its schedule, format and any preparation requirements should be confirmed before the session. If we need to change or cancel it, we will contact the affected student and arrange a suitable alternative or refund for the undelivered session.

6. Questions and policy updates

Questions about how we work can be sent through the Contact page. Current phone and email details are displayed there. This policy works with the Student Terms and the Payment Policy. We may publish updated working practices with a new effective date; changes to a purchased course do not remove applicable consumer rights.

Questions? Use the Contact page on our website. Student Terms and Privacy Policy are also available there.
